

Satellite radio is the finest technological innovation in broadcasting since the industry began. It operates independently of any land-based facilities (such as transmitters or local electric power) and is thus very valuable in the notion of civil defense and public safety. The ability of satellite radio to provide instructions and other information during a natural disaster is crucial. To limit the programming content of satellite radio is denying the public the very mission of radio broadcast.